Panel: “Intercultural Representations of Religious Sites of Memory”

The importance of material and non-material sites of religious memories for questions related to cultural identity is undeniable. However, the creation and preservation of these sites of memories is not confined to the local members of a certain culture, there being always the possibility of external influences that give rise to new and different perspectives. This panel proposes to present and examine diverse forms and modes of intercultural perceptions and representations of religious sites of memory, exploring the importance and influence of multifaceted visions.
